

THE BARRE DAILY TIMES

SATURDAY, MAY 27, 1911.

Published every week-day afternoon.
Subscriptions: One year, $3.00; one month, 25 cents; single copy, 1 cent.

Entered at the post office at Barre as second-class matter.

Frank E. Langley, Publisher.

The average daily circulation of the Barre Daily Times for the week ending last Saturday was copies, the largest circulation of any daily paper in Vermont outside of Burlington.

5,700

Burlington's new hotel opens next week; the hotel skirmishes are over.

Along with the caution to be sparing of the water, we should have included the other liquids.

Rapidly increasing suicides in Boston indicate that the people better hurry up about coming to Vermont.

By official count there are less bees in Vermont, but the quantity of political bees in the bonnet is not decimated.

Provisional President Francisco Leon de la Barra of Mexico (Stop and take a breath), has anything but a pleasant task ahead of him.

William Randolph Hearst was not so frank in disavowing his aspiration for president as William J. Bryan was at St. Johnsbury; Hearst said "You never can tell" and Bryan told right off the reel.

Says a news item:

"R. W. Hulburd returned from the West yesterday. He says Vermont is a paradise alongside of the western country."

Evidently the silver-throated Hyde Parker didn't lose his sweet, silvery tones out West either. Anyway, such words from a man of his experience and discernment ought to help a little toward influencing Vermonters to stick by their home state. There isn't so much of a tendency nowadays to hie away to the glamorous western country, but there is still too much of a drain on Vermont. So Mr. Hulburd deserves commendation for putting in his word about his visit to the territory.

It is natural that the St. Albans Messenger should take up the cudgel in behalf of the Central Vermont railroad against some statements from the Hartford Times, such as this: That the Central "has a lot of old iron strung along from the Canada line to New London"—it is natural for the contemporary to be disgusted because of its alliance. But there is something more back of the protest; it is the justice of the thing. The Hartford paper thinks the Central Vermont roadbed is in no condition to transport the immense freight which the Grand Trunk proposes to carry from the West to the Atlantic when a seaport on the latter shall have been secured. In refutation of that, it is only necessary to point to the huge trains of Barre granite which go out over the Central Vermont at regular intervals for the middle West. If any roadbed is subjected to heavy traffic it is the Central Vermont's northward from Montpelier Junction, and the roadbed has stood up under the strain quite well. Therefore, it is scarcely right or justice to assert that the roadbed is not in condition. What the Central Vermont does need is double trackage which will divide the strain of the heavy trains as much as possible, as well as doing away with many collisions that are due to railroading on a single track. If the Grand Trunk proposes to send its continental traffic to the Atlantic coast over the Central Vermont auxiliary, it will become imperative necessary to double-track the system; and that movement seems likely at a reasonable date.

THE VITAL SPARK.

The White House Electrician Elopes with Mrs. Taft's Maid.

Washington, May 27.—A romance was uncovered at the White House yesterday. George W. Riley the White House electrician, has eloped with Miss Florence I. Marsh, a pretty maid in waiting to Mrs. Taft. The couple have been "suspected" for some time by their friends among the circle of employees at the White House, but the elopement was sudden and unexpected. They were married in this city on Wednesday night by the Rev. J. Howard Wells. So quietly had the pair arranged for their flight that the marriage was not established as a fact until today. Now they have been located at an apartment not far from the shadow of the White House and Riley has given notice that he will return to his duties here, though Mrs. Taft, of course, has lost her maid for all time.

This is the second loss that the White House staff has sustained because of the activities of Cupid. Several months ago the White House cook, Mary Peterson was swooped away from her kingdom in the kitchen by the passionate fervor of James Mulvey a stalwart of the White House police guard.
